

KINO INTERNATIONAL presents a BEAR MEDIA production

WINNEBAGO MAN

Directed by Ben Steinbauer

FINAL PRESS NOTES
JUNE 8, 2011

Theatrical Release: July 9, 2010
DVD Release: November 2, 2010

USA, 2010, 85 minutes
HD Digital; 1.85
Not Rated

Website: <http://winnebagonman.com>
Twitter: <http://twitter.com/WinnebagoMan>

"Madly Entertaining!" — NEW YORK MAGAZINE (CRITIC'S PICK)

"An intriguing meditation on character, celebrity, and the filmmaking process itself." — THE NEW YORKER (CRITIC'S PICK)

"Holy sh*t, is this a fking funny documentary!" — ROGER EBERT

"Bleeping brilliant!" — PEOPLE MAGAZINE

"A full tank of irascible charm." — LA TIMES

"I absolutely loved it." — WHITNEY MATHESON, USA TODAY

"Hilarious and poignant...there is genuine human sympathy...that goes along with the laughter." — NPR

SYNOPSES

LONG SYNOPSIS

Type "The Angriest Man in the World" into any search engine, and one name appears—Jack Rebney, a.k.a. "The Winnebago Man"—an '80s RV salesman whose hilarious, profanity-strewn, on-the-job meltdown was captured on video and passed around on VHS tapes, before exploding into an Internet phenomenon seen by millions. Filmmaker Ben Steinbauer goes in search of the infamous viral video star and discovers him living a hermit-like existence on top of a mountain, unaware of his fame. Rebney turns out to be as sharp-tongued as ever, but more intelligent and lovable than anyone could have imagined. An outrageously funny and unexpectedly redemptive tale of one man's response to unintended celebrity.

SHORT SYNOPSIS

The true story of one of the funniest videos of all time. A young filmmaker goes in search of the legendary "Winnebago Man," and discovers the YouTube star living alone on top of a mountain, as sharp-tongued as ever, but more intelligent and lovable than anyone could have imagined. An outrageously funny and unexpectedly redemptive tale of one man's response to unintended celebrity.

SHORTER SYNOPSIS

A young filmmaker goes in search of the legendary "Winnebago Man," the YouTube star whose hilarious outbursts have delighted millions. An outrageously funny and unexpectedly redemptive tale of one man's response to intended celebrity.

BRIEF SYNOPSIS (140 Characters)

The true story of one of the funniest online videos of all time. Meet the YouTube star whose hilarious outbursts have delighted millions.

ABOUT THE FILMMAKERS

BEN STEINBAUER (DIRECTOR, WRITER, PRODUCER) makes his feature directing debut with Winnebago Man. He is the recipient of the Princess Grace Foundation Award for filmmaking. Steinbauer's short films have played at South by Southwest and aired on PBS. He teaches film at the University of Texas, Austin, and is the co-founder of the commercial production house The Bear.

MALCOLM PULLINGER (WRITER, EDITOR, PRODUCER) is an Emmy-nominated filmmaker based in San Francisco. He produced and edited the documentary Following Sean, which received worldwide theatrical distribution in 2006 and was nominated for a Gotham Award. Other work includes the PBS doc The Key of G and collaborations with Wholphin and DJ Shadow.

JOEL HELLER (PRODUCER, ADDITIONAL WRITER, ADDITIONAL PHOTOGRAPHY) is an award-winning media producer, writer and editor. His producing credits include the Primetime Emmy Awards Online and Random House's "Must-See Movies Video Renter's Companion." He was the associate editor of the Fox Searchlight comedy The Ringer, and over the years, has worked in the cutting rooms of Jim Jarmusch, Alan Pakula, Frank Oz, and John Waters.

JAMES PAYNE/FIELDDGUIDE MEDIA (PRODUCTION COMPANY) has worked on the productions of award-winning documentaries including Hill Stomp Holler, The Fearless Freaks and Okie Noodling, which he wrote and produced; he also co-directed The Creek Runs Red. He is the co-founder of FieldGuide Media.

BRADLEY BEESLEY (CINEMATOGRAPHER) is a critically-acclaimed documentary filmmaker based in Austin. His films include Okie Noodling, Summertime, The Creek Runs Red, Hill Stomp Holler and The Fearless Freaks (a documentary about the Flaming Lips).

BERNDT MADER (CINEMATOGRAPHER) has directed and photographed 11 films, including Road to Tlacotepec – winner of the Audience Award at the 2008 Austin Film Festival. In addition to his film work, he is co-founder of the commercial production house The Bear.

ABOUT THE CHARACTERS

Jack Rebney is the Winnebago Man.

Keith Gordon is a corporate jet pilot based in Las Vegas. Keith and Jack have been friends for more than 35 years.

Ghyslain Raza became known as the “Star Wars Kid” in 2003 after three schoolmates uploaded a videotape they discovered of Raza, swinging a golf ball retriever as if it were a light saber. The two-minute clip is one of the most viewed viral videos of all time.

Aleksey Vayner became famous in 2006 after his video resumé, Impossible Is Nothing, was leaked online as a prank by a prospective employer. Michael Cera (Superbad, Juno) then created a parody video, entitled Impossible is the Opposite of Possible.

Douglas Rushkoff is an author, teacher and documentarian who coined the term “viral video.” His best-selling books include Media Virus, Coercion, Cyberia, and Playing the Future.

Nick Prueher and Joe Pickett are the co-founders of the Found Footage Festival.

Charlie Sotelo and Cinco Barnes co-hosted more than 280 episodes of The Show With No Name, a popular cable access show in Austin from 1997-2005.

Alan Berliner is a documentary filmmaker and media artist based in New York. His critically-acclaimed films include Nobody's Business, Wide Awake, The Sweetest Sound and Intimate Stranger.

Ben Affleck quotes Jack Rebney in the feature film Surviving Christmas, directed by Mike Mitchell.

The Crew of the original industrial sales video, who are featured in Winnebago Man: Tony Dahle (The Intern), Nick Dangeur (Director), Tom Jandric (Gaffer), Kevin Schmitt (Video Engineer), and Mike Welckle (Cameraman).

Ben Steinbauer is a documentary filmmaker.

DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT

I first discovered the “Winnebago Man” in 2002, when a friend handed me a collection of underground videos on a beat-up VHS tape. The “Winnebago Man” clip, which featured the blurry outtakes of a middle-aged RV salesman having a meltdown while making a motorhome sales video, was far and away my favorite. When the torrent of expletives began, I felt like this was something that I was not supposed to be seeing. The comic timing of the video was so precise, it almost seemed like a fake, something scripted and performed.

The barrage of profanity was hilarious and jaw-dropping, but there was also something deeper. The Winnebago Man’s cursing and shouting — at the crew and at himself — was different from other meltdowns. He was at his breaking point, yet he still managed to maintain a level of self-awareness and humor. While I was doubling over with laughter, I also found myself empathizing with this man and his situation. He was tearing himself down, along with the artifice of film production and the posturing of sales and advertising. My roommate and I re-watched the clip every night for about a year. I memorized it, showed it to everyone I knew, and I tried to find out the story behind the video. No one seemed to know anything about the clip, despite its widespread popularity, and this further fueled my curiosity.

Then in 2005, with the birth of YouTube, the online video revolution took off — and the “Winnebago Man” clip became one of the first viral sensations. I was fascinated by the idea that millions of people had access to this man’s private moments of frustration, yet they knew nothing about him as a person. I wanted to know how he felt about this attention, and how the popularity of such a humiliating clip had affected him. I learned that his name was Jack Rebney, and I pieced together clues that eventually led me to the video crew. None of them had heard from or seen Rebney since the Summer of 1988 when they shot the commercial. So I hired a private investigator to find out if Rebney was even still alive.

As I got closer to finding him, I started to question my motivations. Was I turning into some kind of Internet stalker? At the heart of my curiosity was a fascination with new technologies that make it easy (perhaps too easy) to share information about ourselves and others. I wondered what happens to regular people who are suddenly exposed on the Internet in a negative light? What are the consequences of this new kind of accidental celebrity? And how does a person deal with unwanted notoriety of this magnitude?

The “Star Wars Kid,” the “Numa Numa” guy, “Ms. Teen South Carolina,” along with numerous others have found a place in our cultural vocabulary almost overnight as a result of their online exposure. Because videos can spread across the globe virtually instantaneously, a person's reputation can now become damaged in a way that is devastating and permanent. It used to be possible to move to another town where no one knows you. But today, the only option might be to completely drop out of society. So when I learned that Jack Rebney had done exactly that, I figured it must have been because of his Internet notoriety.

I found Rebney living in a small cabin in a remote forest in Northern California. But it turned out that he hadn't retreated there to escape his online fans — he'd moved there more than 15 years ago. Not only was he unaffected by his popularity on the Internet, until recently, he was completely unaware of it. Once I began filming Rebney, I discovered that he had little desire to talk about his life or even about the video. His only desire was to express his ideas about politics and society. This was confounding to me at first. My experience has been that if you turn on a camera, before long, people will tell you their life story. This is especially true now — in the age of Facebook, Twitter, and reality TV — as we become less and less private people. Today, it's unusual if you can't find out about someone, simply by googling their name. Rebney, however, had worked in television for decades, and was distrustful of the media and media makers. He had a strong belief that our private lives should be guarded.

I began to question my voyeuristic impulse to explore the roots of Jack's anger. And after many frustrating dead ends, I took a step back and I realized I was missing the real drama that was unfolding right in front of me: my struggle with Jack over how he wanted to be represented and remembered. Rebney's desire to have an audience, while, at the same time, living behind a locked gate, is emblematic of our time. It's an impulse that many people can relate to. Winnebago Man explores the collision of privacy, celebrity and self-expression in the digital age, but ultimately, it is Rebney's choice to embrace his Internet fame and audience, that is the heart of the film.

Ben Steinbauer, April 2010

STATEMENT FROM JACK REBNEY

ON THE FILM

When Ben first contacted me, I didn't really have any idea what ultimately was going to happen. Why would anyone want to make a documentary about me? And not really about me, but predicated on this Winnebago nonsense. It didn't register at first. Ben wanted to make a film based on what he perceived my situation to be, and at first, he could not understand that notoriety is completely immaterial to me.

I think that Winnebago Man is a wonderful film and I attribute that to Ben's skill as a filmmaker, and the abilities of his editor and crew. It's not War and Peace. It's not Doctor Zhivago. But it says something, that after seeing it, people come up to me and throw their arms around me and they're still laughing. People come up to me with tears in their eyes. It's not surprising, then, that I like the film. And I haven't liked anything in about 20 years.

ON THE MEDIA

I have worked in various arenas of media during my life. I went to work for CBS in 1953. The people who were my mentors were the icons of news journalism in America: Ed Murrow and Eric Sevareid. I had the deepest respect for these men, for their professionalism, for their almost immaculate ability to separate themselves as journalists, newsmen, reporters, anchors and then commentators. They had to wear all of those hats. And they did it with brilliance. So what has changed? It's simple. Look at who owns media. It's preposterous when we look at what we hear and see today in terms of broadcast news coverage. I feel it's non-existent here in the US and it's tragic, because if we had networks with the cojones to tell us truly what is going on, there would be an immense house cleaning.

ON NEW MEDIA

In terms of Twitter, I understand that you can only speak to someone in terms of 140 characters. From my perspective, our children are going to forget about the English language and go back to the click language... click, click, click... and everyone will recognize that this kind of a click means 'oh well, let's go to the movies' and this kind of click means 'no, I don't think so.' The language is going to disappear completely! That's my understanding of Twitter... Ha! It's ghastly funny to me. But of course, what right do I have to make any analysis at all? It's like trying to eat soufflé.

ABOUT THE OUTTAKES CLIP

Following a grueling two-week shoot in August 1988 for a Winnebago sales ad, some of the crew edited together outtakes of RV salesman Jack Rebney into a four-minute clip, which eventually became known as “Winnebago Man.”

While the finished sales ad went to Winnebago dealers to promote the 1989 Itasca Sunflyer RV, copies of the “Winnebago Man” outtakes were being passed amongst the crew and their friends in Iowa. Eventually, the video fell into the hands of VHS tape collectors, who began copying and trading it, sparking an underground phenomenon that turned Rebney into a cult hero. When the online video revolution took off in 2005, Rebney became one of the first Internet superstars.

Today, the “Winnebago Man” video has been viewed by more than 20 million people worldwide, and continues to attract new fans from around the world — including a notable following in Hollywood. In May 2010, Conan O’Brien named the “Winnebago Man” clip one of his all-time favorites on YouTube. Spike Jonze is said to have sent out copies of the original video as Christmas gifts. Ben Affleck quotes Rebney in the film Surviving Christmas, and Alec Baldwin’s character on 30 Rock has quoted and imitated Rebney. There’s even a painting of Rebney — as Shrek — that hangs in the Dreamworks Animation offices.

Winnebago Man was the first theatrically-released feature film about a YouTube celebrity, and the outtakes clip is regarded as one of the original classics that helped launch the age of online video.

Original outtakes clip on YouTube: <http://tinyurl.com/winnebagonman>

THE QUOTABLE JACK REBNEY

“Tony, do me a favor will ya please, will ya, will ya do me a kindness?”

“My mind is just a piece of sh*t this morning!”

“That doesn't make any difference to me at this juncture.”

“Don't slam the fking door! No more!”

“I can't fking make my mind work!”

“Bullsh*t, I'm gonna slate this fker!”

“I'm going to give a clue here now. I don't want any more bullsh*t anytime during the day! From anyone! That includes me!”

“We've got flies comin' for us.”

“Get out of here, you fkin' flies!”

“Accoutrama?! What is that sh*t?”

“I'm blinded by that fkin' hot light!”

“Do you believe any of that sh*t?”

“You're disturbing what's left of my brain!”

CREDITS

Directed & Produced by BEN STEINBAUER

Written by MALCOLM PULLINGER
BEN STEINBAUER

Produced by JOEL HELLER
MALCOLM PULLINGER

in association with
JAMES PAYNE & FIELDGUIDE MEDIA

Edited by
MALCOLM PULLINGER

Cinematography by BRADLEY BEESLEY
BERNDT MADER

Original Music
LYMAN HARDY
WILLIAM C. ANDERSON
JOHN LEON
ANDREW HOKE
TAYLOR HOLLAND

Additional Music
SPAGHETTI WESTERN STRING CO.

Colorist / Online
NICK SMITH

Sound Design & Re-Recording Mixer
CHRIS KEYLAND

Motion Graphics
BRANDON THOMAS

Additional Photography
JOEL HELLER
JEREMY LAMBERTON
CHRIS MCINROY
ALAN NOVEY
JAMES PAYNE
ANTHONY PENTA
LEE PHELAN
MALCOLM PULLINGER
MARK PROKSCH
PJ RAVAL
MARCEL RODRIGUEZ
REBECCA SIRMONS
BRANDON THOMAS
PETER S. THOMPSON

Production Sound
LUKE ALLEN
BEN LOWRY
JAMES PAYNE
CHRIS RUSCH
JOHN SIMS
MARIANELA VEGA

Additional Writing
LOUISA HALL
JOEL HELLER
BERNDT MADER
NATASHA ROSOW

Editorial Consultants
MARY MANHARDT
KAREN SCHMEER

Additional Editing
JOLYNN GARNES

Assistant Editor
BRANDON THOMAS

Ten-Eighty Post Producer
AIMEE ROBBINS

Film Transfer Colorist
PEGGY CLARK-HOLDEN

Theatrical Poster Design
KII ARENS

Theatrical Poster Illustration
GREG FRANKLIN

Title Sequence Featuring Photos by GRANT HAMILTON

Design
The Hit Show
BEN PLIMPTON

Still Photography
SHANE BROWN

Winnebago/RV Photographs
MATT BOWER
ALAN DEP
HARRY J. HALYK
TODD SHIRLEY mannydiller
LUKE HEALEY MILES STOREY MARK GUTKNECHT
JOSEPH ROBERTSON

Shrek Painting
ANTHONY ZIERHUT