When aspiring rapper Sol is discovered by a group of Gen-Z musicians after performing at a house party, he joins their tour through the heart of Texas and embarks on a once-in-a-lifetime road trip. Sol and his new collaborators bond over their shared pains and longings from the lives they left behind. Bold and brash, yet surprisingly sensitive and vulnerable, these young artists pour their souls into the music they create together. The novelty of Sol's newfound family fades as the demons Sol left behind come back to haunt him, including his guilt over abandoning his ailing friend. His sense of self is put to the ultimate test as he seeks refuge from the rootlessness and loss that has defined his existence. Set to a lo-fi, genre-bending hip-hop soundtrack, Katherine Propper's award-winning debut is suffused with a hazy and infectious energy and features virtuosic musical performances, from the tour van to the stage, that allow the ensemble's winning chemistry to shine.

★ ★ DIRECTOR'S BIO

★ ★ DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT

In 2016, I moved to Austin from L.A., my hometown, to study filmmaking at the MFA film program at UT. Some may have found it strange that I chose to leave L.A. to pursue filmmaking in Texas... But at the time, I found something uniquely special in the films coming out of Texas. Terrence Malick, Robert Rodriguez, and Richard Linklater had built a rich legacy of independent film. Newer filmmakers like David Lowery and Kat Candler were also making personal films in Texas. I came to Austin inspired by this regional filmmaking that felt rooted in stories about ordinary people — stories that somehow felt transcendent. I knew I wanted to capture a bit of that transcendence in my own filmmaking — a quality I believe emerges when films manifest some deep truth about humanity. It has been my great pleasure working in Austin. I have been able to meet and work with some of the film heroes I mentioned above and learn from their craft. But the greater blessing has been working with the people about whom I have been lucky to make films.

In October 2016, a couple months into living in Texas, I posted a Craigslist ad in search of talent for a school project. An intriguing teenager replied to my post. Sauve was a talented football player with vibrant hair, dyed in all the colors of the rainbow. He told me he was a rapper and that he would be famous one day. I believed him. We worked together filming my project and connected over shared dreams. A year later, I asked him to star in my short film, "Street Flame," about teens in the skate and graffiti community. Sauve's also a talented skater and convinced his cousin to act in the film. For the short, I worked with a group of first-time actors and collaborated with them to make a film about their world. It was my first exploration of this creative process, a process I've expanded on in my other films. While making "Street Flame," I told Sauve that I wanted to make a feature film with him. We made a pact and continued on our separate journeys. Sauve moved to L.A. with only a backpack in hand and went on to be an opener on a world-tour with JuiceWrlld. I finished the film and continued making more.

In March 2020, I put to paper what had been on my mind for two years — the feature with Sauve. I wrote a script that was inspired by aspects of Sauve's life experience being a young rapper and going on tour. It's a story about grappling with shame and overcoming hardships while pursuing one's dreams. It's a story about lost souls who are like a family and pursue radical creative expression. It's a heartfelt collaboration I shared with an amazing group of musicians who were willing to be vulnerable and excited to play characters on-screen similar to themselves. It's set in Texas, and I hope the film will have a glimpse of transcendence.
